

Dear ARW Member,

An article in today's Wall Street Journal caught my attention: "A Slow-Growth America Can't Lead the World" by John B. Taylor. The article expounds on the upcoming G-20 meeting later this week:

"At the most recent meeting a year ago in Seoul, the G-20 rejected the president's pleas for a deficit-increasing Keynesian stimulus and instead urged credible budget-deficit reduction and a return to sound fiscal policy. And on that trip he had to defend the activist monetary policy of the Federal Reserve against widespread criticism that its easy money was damaging to emerging-market countries, causing volatile capital flows and inflationary pressures.

With a weak recovery—retarded by new health-care legislation and financial regulations, an exploding debt, and threats of higher taxes—the U.S. is in no position to lead as it has in the past."

Translation: America's weak fiscal footing has lowered our stature and power among other nations. Our sluggish economic growth, focusing on short-term "gains", coupled with President Obama's "lead from behind" foreign policy have transformed us into an increasingly weak superpower.

Three years into an Obama administration (and an economic roller coaster ride later) I wonder when we'll get back on track. The world depends on America to lead and I hope our present-day leaders and current candidates appreciate this as well.

Kim
